

(Continued from the Second Page.) told you to kill her. You could not resist. Something seemed to say, "Kill her, and you can get her money, and then you won't have to give her a deed of trust on the house." You never wanted to give her a deed of trust, but your husband said it must be done. The devil told you to go down stairs and get the kitchen poker, and you went. When you came up again it seemed to tell you to go and get your husband's shirt and coat and put them on, so that if you got any blood on you it would look as though he did it. You did not think he could be convicted. You thought his good character would acquit him. You went and put on his shirt and coat; you then came down and struck her a great many times with the poker, and just as you stopped she jumped up very suddenly and ran to the window, which was up; it frightened you for a moment, and then when you had got there she had fallen out. You supposed it was her last strength. You then went down stairs and took the money and struck her several times again, and then washed your hands at the hydrant, letting it run a few moments. You then went up in the dining-room and looked at the money. It had not put it on, and you were afraid to keep it, and you put it on the fire. You found after you went up to your room that you had blood on your night-cap, and you put it in the stove and it was burned up. You then got into bed. This was about half an hour before Sarah Campbell came home. After you heard the bell ring several times, you woke up, and asked me to go down and let her in, and see where mother was. This must all be in your own language.

Camilla, if I should die, who would nurse you when you were sick? Who would be the company for you that I can? I have nursed you through many weary hours of pain. If you should father or feel too weak to do this, think of that; think how lonely you would be without me, and all the world against you; but I know you will not leave me alone now. You will be asked a great many questions, but you must not contradict yourself when you answer them. It is an awful, awful thing for you to do this, but it is the only thing that can save my life, and I would have done this to have saved yours, if you had been convicted. If I had done it, it would have cost me my life; but they can't do anything at all with you now—can't even hold you under bail. If I have to die, the public generally will still believe that you are guilty, and if I live I will go with you to some other State under an assumed name. I will never, never leave you. I will work and starve if necessary to provide for you comfortably. Only help me to escape this awful, awful death; and I know you will do it. You will not deceive me in this dreadful hour of peril. Do not fail to do anything for me, but your own self. As soon as you are done with it burn it up. I will give you all the necessary instructions how to do it, when to do it, and where to do it.

Second. You did not do it, nor see it done, but you know that your husband did not do it. You had made no arrangements with Mr. Gilbert to have it done. He first spoke to you about it one afternoon, two months before it was done. You happened to meet him at the corner of Fifteenth and Pine, as you were coming down Pine, having been taking a walk; he spoke to you, and walked down Pine to Twelfth street with you. He asked you how your mother was, and remarked what a trouble she must be to you. If she was to die how nice you would be. He said he would see you next time you saw him was about three weeks after. You met him on Eighth street below Race. He again asked about your mother; how was she? If she was not rather childish? This time he asked if she did not carry a good deal of money about her. You asked him how he knew anything about it. He said that your husband accidentally mentioned it once when he was talking about her, and also that Mr. Henderson had told him. He left you at the corner of Filbert street. About a week afterwards you met him in the car on Ninth street. He spoke and asked how your mother was. You got out at the corner of Ninth and Arch streets and left him in it. Two or three days afterwards you saw him again. You were looking in the window at the pictures at Catekunt's, in Arch street, above Seventh, when he came up and spoke to you. He then asked you if you were going up the street? You told him you were. He said he would walk up with you. He walked up to Tenth, where you took the car to come home. On this walk he asked you how your mother was? and again said how nicely you and your husband would be fixed if she should die, and how imprudent it was for your mother to carry her money about with her, and asked you if she did not stay up very late at night? and whether you and your husband stayed up with her? You told him that we went to bed very early. This was all about the trouble with him about the will. He apologized to you for reading it to you. You never told your husband of meeting him, for he did not like him, and said he was a bad man. You did not see him again for about two weeks. When you again met him in Eighth street, above Chestnut. He spoke to you, and walked up Eighth to Arch, where he left you, going down Arch. He again got to talking about your mother; how troublesome she must be, and if she was to die how nice we could live, nothing to trouble us. He also asked about our servant; whether we had a good one; how hard it was to get a good one. That they always wanted an afternoon and evening every week. He asked you if we gave our servant this? You told him that she had every Thursday afternoon and evening, and every other Sunday afternoon and evening. He then asked you if your mother allowed her to stay out later? You said she was generally out between nine and ten o'clock. He also asked you if you waited up for her or gave her a key? You told him your mother always waited up for her; that you and your husband went to bed. He asked what time? You said about 8 o'clock. He then told you that he had been on New York, and had an elegant time. He said that he took the world very easy; that nothing ever troubled him. You saw him a few days after this in Chestnut street; he going up and you going down. He bowed to you. You saw him again, the Thursday before the murder, at Eighth and Chestnut; he joined you and walked up as far as Cherry, when he left you and went up Cherry street. On this occasion, as usual, he talked of the money mother had asked you to carry about. He asked you how much money you thought about $5,000. He told you that he had thought about $5,000. He said it was a nice pile. You asked him how he would like to have it. He said first rate. You told him he could have it if he would send for it at a proper time. He asked when. He said it was soon. You then told him Sunday evening. He said he would do it. He asked which door he should send to. You told him that the front gate might be unbolted. He said he would send somebody to make everything right. On the evening of the murder you went and unlocked the padlock, which was a spring lock and would lock itself, and unbolted the front gate.

You went to bed and your husband came a few minutes after he went to sleep, and was not out of the room till he went down stairs to let the girl in. You was awake, but heard no noise except about a half hour before the girl came home. When you thought you heard the front door shut. These conversations you had with Mr. Gilbert were always in the afternoon, between three and five o'clock.

Board of School Control. A stated meeting of the Board of School Control was held yesterday afternoon, President Steinmetz in the chair. Bills to the amount of $23,523-45 were reported by the Committee on Appropriations. They were ordered to be paid. "53rd Putnam History of Pennsylvania" was adopted as a text-book in the public schools of this district. Resolutions recommending the purchase of lots for school purposes were offered, as follows:

would tear you to pieces, and that you cannot conceal it any longer; that you are sorry that you did it, and that it is killing you by degrees. This looks very rational. Everybody knows that when a person is under a strong excitement they are stronger than at any other time, and when the excitement leaves they become very weak. This will account naturally for your supernatural strength at that time. Don't think that you will wait a day or two to see if some of the other plans that are being done will answer, for if you do it will be fatal; every moment counts now. If you are asked what time it was when you struck her, answer that you suppose it was after 9 o'clock, but you were too excited to notice about time.

Camilla, if you make the first confession you can, if you like, say that you made the acquaintance of Mr. Lee by being introduced to him by Dr. Eaton about ten years ago. You know all about Dr. Eaton, and you know that he is dead, so he cannot contradict you. If you should do this you can say that sometimes you would see Mr. Lee very often, and sometimes not for months.

Oh, Camilla, I am afraid your telling me that you will do anything for me is all talk, because, if you fail to do as I request, nothing under Heaven will save me. For God's sake and my life, do this without fail.

Mr. Bringhurst should ask you why you came to him to tell him this, answer that you do not know who else to go to. If you are asked about your former life refuse to answer. If you are asked how you knew Mr. Lee was a gambler, answer, "You asked him one time, and he said he sometimes played to pass away time." Don't forget to have the time of the days of your meeting with Mr. Lee all right. If asked, I would say that through the middle of the summer you did not see anything of him. Don't for Heaven's sake fail now!

From Michigan. The Village of Hancock Destroyed by Fire—Over Two Hundred Families Made Homeless Wanderers.

MILWAUKEE, April 13.—A despatch from Houghton, Michigan, dated April 12, says:—

At 1 o'clock yesterday morning a fire broke out in a French saloon in Hancock, Michigan, which resulted in the almost complete destruction of the village. Every store, business place, saloon, etc., except the Post Office, Gibson's tailor shop, and a millinery store, near the Masonic Hall, were destroyed, together with about fifty private dwellings. The principal buildings saved were the Masonic hall, St. Patrick's Hall, Methodist and Catholic churches and schools, and a few buildings adjoining and lying west of them, and warehouses. The buildings and docks under the bluff, on the lake shore district, were burned over about six-five acres, comprising six entire blocks, containing one hundred and ten occupied buildings, besides the usual number of barns.

The loss is not far from $500,000, with about $100,000 insurance. Over two hundred families were left homeless, or lost a large portion of their effects.

A meeting of the citizens of the county will be held to-day, to make suitable provision for the destitute, and raise funds for their relief. Many of them are in a pitiable condition.

The following are the principal losses:—Leopold, Austin & Co., saloon and dwelling; J. G. Brown, saloon and dwelling; Congregational Church; H. H. Wentz, store; A. S. Frain, tin store and shop; Baer & Brother, meat store and dwelling; Holland & Patterson, hardware store; John Backer, store; John Fitzgerald, dwelling-house; M.
